Medical Education In The Age Of A.I.

As artificial intelligence transforms our world, what will this new technological landscape mean for medical students? Does AI need to be a central focus of any curriculum discussion?

Published in the journal Academic Medicine, Wartman et al discuss these emerging concerns from the perspective of information versus artificial intelligence, medical education reform, and what skills students will need to work in this new environment.

What Keeps Nurses Happy?

After conducting many training sessions across NSW, we have concluded that 101% of nurses who receive a free CIAP torch-pen will experience dizzying increases in measurable happiness.

However, an actual real-life study published in the peer-reviewed journal, Nursing Management, discusses other factors that affect well-being in nurses. The study found that physical exercise, mindfulness practice, spending time in nature, and listening to music were all beneficial.

Last Month's POLL Results

Last month, we asked you which factor contributed the most to our growing obesity crisis. This is how you voted:

Poor Nutrition Literacy - 14%

Poor Food Decisions - 39%

Sedentary Lifestyle - 47%

How Cyber Safe Are Our Medical Devices?

Medical devices including pacemakers, drug pumps, and defibrillators can all be reprogrammed wirelessly, which makes them a potential target of cyber attacks. A news segment in JAMA highlights the collaboration between the FDA and the DHS to protect medical devices from this type of threat. The collaboration follows the 2017 WannaCry ransomware attack, which affected a number of US hospitals and medical devices.
