Nurses on the front line: The 1918 influenza pandemic and COVID-19

Because of advances in nursing, medicine, and science, nurses' work is quite different today than it was in 1918.

Yet two facts remain the same: In the setting of a pandemic of a dangerous virus for which there are few proven treatments and no vaccine, skilled nursing care is critical to patient outcomes; and support from federal, state, and local governments, community organisations, and volunteers is as important now as it was in 1918.

What is the diagnosis?

An anteroposterior chest radiograph of a six-year-old boy with this condition was hospitalised in respiratory distress.

A lung biopsy was performed because the right lower lung densities persisted despite aggressive bronchodilation therapy.

Vapes and adolescents

Over 14 per cent of Australian high school students have admitted to using e-cigarettes and their use is continuing to rise.

This study from the MJA analyses the composition of popular e-liquids and identifying toxins and carcinogens and changes over time, studies such as this illuminate the potential health risks associated with vaping.

Beekeeping the mind active

Andrew Mockridge, a specialty training registrar in anaesthesia and intensive care medicine, dives deep into talking about how beekeeping helps him deal with the stress of a tough day.

Now more than ever engaging in a personal hobby could be just what the Doctor (or specialty training registrar) ordered.

Indigenous adolescents: a global collective for an equitable and sustainable future

Indigenous peoples, comprising almost 500 million individuals from across 90 countries, hold the longest continuous cultures on the planet.

Our Indigenous community in Australia helped shape the principles of primary health care in the pivotal Alma-Ata Declaration in 1978, Which is a foundation of universal health coverage.

Frontline Workers' Challenges in Hearing Children's Voices in Family Support Services

The rights-based principle and practice of “children’s voices” continue to receive significant attention from academics, policymakers, and practitioners.

Article 12 of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child (UNCRC) (1989) states that children have a right to be heard and participate in decision making.
